Location of the two-day in-person training: Budapest

Total number of participants: 13

Number of participants from the countryside: 5

The accredited six-month teacher training program aims to prepare teachers to develop their students' awareness and filtering skills when consuming information. Embedded in a framework of critical thinking, the training program expands students' knowledge so that they can more confidently recognize false and misleading online content and recognize reliable, quality news. During the first two months of the training program, teachers acquired the knowledge necessary to teach the subject in school through an e-learning course. The aim of the weekend classroom training was to deepen the teachers' knowledge and to jointly process the e-learning course in a practice-oriented and experience-based manner. The program for the second day was to prepare for the teaching practice in the third phase of the training and to deepen methodological knowledge. In the third phase of the training, between December 2025 and May 2026, teachers will implement the teaching materials received in the programme in their own schools in grades 9-12 in 9 lessons. The teaching materials enable the development of critical media literacy in a practice-oriented, experience-based manner, built on group work.

The teachers participated actively and with interest in the classroom training. The training took place in a good atmosphere, and based on the teachers' feedback, the e-learning material and classroom training adequately prepared them to teach the curriculum package in school.

We have selected some of their feedback:

"I felt very comfortable, mainly thanks to the trainers. They created an open, friendly atmosphere, which was framed by serious professional knowledge. This training shed light on new things and reminded me of things I learned a long time ago, which I have already applied in my classes this week. I am very happy that I had the opportunity to participate in this course. Thank you very much!"

"Thank you for your professionalism, for 'breathing together' and 'vibrating together'."

"It was a little dense/intense, but I gained some very useful knowledge. The training took place in a good atmosphere."
